

To the Attention of Readers and Visitors

As outlined in this guide-book, the site of Aphrodisias essentially consists of the remains of the ancient city, excavated or not yet brought to light, and of a museum. During summer and early autumn months excavation-restoration and publication preparation activities accelerated in recent years are continuing. Because of the demands of such work, it may not always be possible nor safe for the visitor to examine all areas discussed here. Furthermore, due to the limited space provided by the museum, a number of sculpture items and artifacts illustrated in these pages cannot be exhibited. Changes may also occur in some of the museum displays. Plans to remedy to this and more specifically to transform the whole of Aphrodisias into an archaeological park featuring both indoor and outdoor exhibits and including additional monumental restorations of buildings and appropriate sculptural decoration in situ are currently being studied.
